Attention citizens! Your Dept. Of Pandemia notices some of you are NOT listening. Now hear this: The thing is as bad as ever. In fact, it's mad you aren't scared, so it's worse.

The less dangerous it seems, the MORE dangerous it is. We're just being honest. Attention citizens!

Wow. @nature published a paper claiming that lockdowns cut the spread of #COVID-19 by hundreds of millions of cases. The @Washingtonpost (inevitably) lapped it up. A look at the paper reveals it is more full of holes than the mask I have (not) worn all week. Let's discuss...

Shutdowns prevented 60 million coronavirus infections in the U.S., study finds

United States and 10 other nations in China, according to a research study published Monday that examined how stay-at-home orders and other restrictions limited the spread of the coronavirus.

A separate study from epidemiologists at Imperial College London estimated the shutdowns saved about 62 million lives in 11 European countries, including 500,000 in the United Kingdom, and dropped infection rates by an average of 82

Nature, used completely different methods to reach similar conclusions. They suggest that the aggressive and unprecedented shutdowns, which caused massive economic disruptions and job losses, were effective at halting the exponential spread of the novel coronavirus.

Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

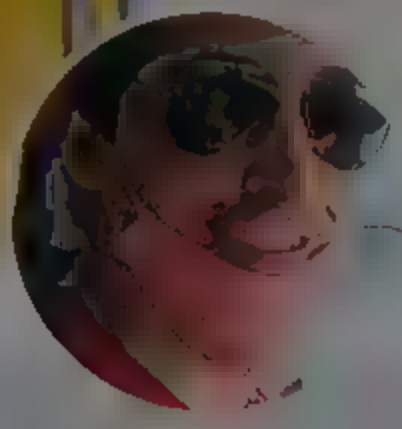
What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.



What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

And here's updated Florida data (remember, Florida just went on a relatively loose lockdown, no way it could be having an impact yet): 2000 FEWER patients and 200 FEWER ICU patients than yesterday. You read that right. Florida hospitals are emptier today.

Florida is the third largest state in the US, huge elderly population, remember those spring break pictures? The nasty NYC outbreak increasingly appears entirely disconnected from what's happening almost everywhere else in the US.

Thinking about the top 5 US policy failures ever (yes, this is how I spend my time):

1 Slavery/failure to end peacefully
2 Failure of Reconstruction
3 Pro-cyclical fiscal policies in Great Depression

Know what 3, 4, and 5 have in common? They were all led by Washington technocrat types (Hoover was an engineer, McNamara ran the World Bank) who insisted their models and theories could outsmart reality, while ignoring what the data was telling them in real time.

4/ High school seniors are being denied their only chance at graduation and prom:

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?

possibility of ending an in-person semester for all of us. Their poor choices have led to a concerning and rapid increase in the number of new undergraduate COVID-19 positive cases. We know the majority of you reading this message are following the university's COVID-19 guidance, and we are grateful to all of you who have worked so hard to help by doing your part.

For two weeks, starting now, we are intensifying our efforts to identify and swiftly remove those individuals who have created this unacceptable risk for our campus and community and who have undermined your hard work to stay together. Students who continue to violate our safety policies, who fail to comply with directions from our public health officials and who engage in unsafe activities that risk spreading the virus will be asked to leave this university.

We believe the damage done by these individuals can be reversed. But it must be done quickly. And it will require those of you who have been working so hard this semester to shoulder even more responsibility in these next two weeks.

For two weeks, starting today at 5 p.m., for your own protection, we expect all undergraduate students to limit their in-person interactions to only the most essential activities. These include things like taking twice weekly COVID-19 tests, attending class, purchasing groceries and food, going to work, engaging in individual outdoor activity, attending religious services and seeking medical attention.

And here is the hardest part. We need you to strictly avoid social gatherings under any circumstances for these two weeks. We know what we are asking with this. Being together with friends is a big part of why you chose to come back. And for our freshmen, opening your college experience with the same isolation that ended your high school careers is intensely disappointing.

Wow. @nature published a paper claiming that lockdowns cut the spread of #COVID-19 by hundreds of millions of cases. The @Washingtonpost (inevitably) lapped it up. A look at the paper reveals it is more full of holes than the mask I have (not) worn all week. Let's discuss...

Okay, so your first clue this is bunkum is on THE VERY FIRST PAGE: Note when the paper was received. Yep, March 22, basically before the epidemic had EVEN begun in the United States or social distancing had been in place for very long anywhere else.

In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

But without comparing countries that DIDN'T lock down to those that did, they have no way of knowing if the decrease from the early rapid spread simple represents the natural and normal track of the virus...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

These are people who were quite sick - they were hospitalized for nearly a week on average - but once they got better, they got better. Yet people who DON'T EVEN HAVE A POSITIVE COVID TEST complain about vague symptoms for months? The diagnosis is Munchausen's syndrome by CNN.

The Swiss are done with the ro. Some great tidbits here:

"Restaurants and bars have been bustling since mid-May..." but only 3.5% of new infections come in restaurants, bars, or clubs. Intrafamilial infection is the leading driver.

Yes, and they actually tended to be hospitalized for shorter periods and receive less intensive care the first time. They were probably just undertreated and discharged too fast - this was NY in March and April, where beds were at a premium.

Dr. Fauci says ro positive tests need to drop from 40K to 10K (why? even at 40,000 hospitals are fine) before we can have a "safe flu season" (whatever that is).

But ro positives are overstated up to 90%, so we're below 10,000 already. Yay! We did it!

2/ So they are now projecting 410,000 #Covid deaths in the US by the end of 2020 (up from "181,756.26" on Aug. 30 - I guess someone was 26% dead.)

That's a huge increase - a horrifying projection. It translates into almost 60,000 new deaths a month.

Despite the fact that the virus spread UNCONSTRAINED THROUGH THE ENTIRE SUNBELT.

3/ Since the end of May, the US has had roughly 75,000 deaths (let's not get into the counting/PCR issues, we'll pretend they're all real for the purposes of this discussion). That's 25,000 a month.

Despite the fact that the virus spread UNCONSTRAINED THROUGH THE ENTIRE SUNBELT.

4/ From Miami to LA, Houston to Atlanta - almost 150 million people. Outside of California, most states had limited restrictions - bars and masks (which weren't used all that widely, more on that in a bit).

Yet monthly deaths this summer were less than 1/2 the IMHE forecast...

NO, NO, NO. All across the Sunbelt, hospitals have emptied. Deaths are dropping too. The daily average in Arizona is down 2/3s from the peak. Nationally, the US is now back under 900 deaths a day, down 20% in a month.

So PCR tests vastly overstate the number of currently infected/infectious #COVID cases.

Meanwhile, antibody tests likely understate how many people have already recovered, especially if they had mild cases.

3/ "In a human-dominated world, in which our human activities represent aggressive, damaging, and unbalanced interactions with nature, we will increasingly provoke new disease emergence."

Huh. Sounds like human domination is the real problem here?

5/ But, see, if #COVID-19 turns out to be a testing-driven lil-bit-worse-than-a-bad-flu year, what then? Maybe we WON'T need to redesign all of human existence because some 79-year-old bureaucrat wants us to?

Just spitballing here.

This is not to argue that they did or did not cause the strain - I'm just thinking about timing here - how quickly the panic outran the caseloads. How if we'd waited even a matter of weeks we might have seen the natural waxing and waning of the epidemic.

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

Though I am against censorship, how can unreported truths be based on official data?

Because he is interpreting the data. To fit his narrative which I do not know enough about to agree or disagree with but this is bad that Amazon does this.

distancing restrictions, new estimates by researchers at Harvard University suggest that the United States cannot safely reopen unless it conducts more than three times the number of coronavirus tests it is currently administering over the next month.

An average of 146,000 people per day have been tested for the coronavirus nationally so far this month, according to the COVID Tracking Project, which on Friday reported 3.6 million total tests across the country. To

It's increasingly clear the focus on widespread testing (as opposed to widespread ANTIBODY testing) is a sideshow designed to delay reopening and take the focus away from the empty hospitals. It's another version of wait two weeks.

At this point, given the LA/Santa Clara/NY pregnant/Chelsea MA/Boston homeless/Johnson County/German/French carrier data - and the EMPTY hospitals - in any rational world, our conversation would be immediately turning to how quickly we can end the lockdowns and open schools.

4/ High school seniors are being denied their only chance at graduation and prom:

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

In a normal investigative reporting world the biggest question being chased right now might be how the guy who predicted "mad sheep" and nine-figure bird flu deaths and whose model depends on 13-year-old code he hasn't released somehow has the ear of the world's governments.

Buried in this article about how tech companies are making tracking you even easier is some good news. Just 1 in 20 people have downloaded the new tracing app in Virginia, the first state to offer it.

Constant surveillance isn't that appealing. Who knew?

3: On top of that, all the usual caveats apply - the interactions are basically hearsay, no emails or other documentation exist, and so people should know whether the person who is reporting them heard what Trump said first-, second-, or third-hand.

My understanding to this question is that the answer is yes: the death of anyone who has had a positive #Sarscov2 test is counted as a #covid death - without regard to timing (ie even if several months have passed between the two events). Would welcome correction if I'm wrong.

Hi Alex, I love your work and I've followed your twitter feed daily since the "pandemic" started. I have a question. Have you found any study or information on the the connection between a covid death vs when they were quote infected? Such as, say a nursing home has a problem in March, now it's September. Someone in the group of patients who had a problem dies of natural causes. Is this still being counted as a covid death? I know it would never be reported bc the media is thriving in this bad time, but the more people like yourself can get this information to some of us the more we can share it

I can't comment on that, however, I can report that July 29, 1 week after testing negative for COVID19, my grandmother, who was 3 weeks shy of her 100th birthday, passed away. Cause of death was listed as COVID19. Rationale given was that someone on her floor had tested positive.

Correct. Why would anyone trust a rushed vaccine for a virus that is seriously dangerous to very few people - especially after we have seen public health authorities pretend masks work against nearly all the available evidence?

True. I have always believed in vaccines - I'm vaccinated, our kids are vaccinated - but seeing the public health establishment happily lie for six months about #Covid has made me think I should at least look at the anti-vax case (though not enough to do so).

So "police and protestors clash" is a failed trope and the definition of false equivalence after three-plus months of street violence. The correct headline is: "protestors riot; police attempt to restore order."

Language matters.

field hospital deployed to CenturyLink Field Event Center to the U.S. Department of Defense.

The 250-bed facility, for which setup began on March 30, was intended to help Washington state's health care system tend to non Covid-19 patients in the event of a hospital surge.

But just three days after announcing the facility was ready to receive patients, officials say they're returning the hospital to the federal government.

The action is aimed at helping another state with a more significant need for hospital capacity at this time, according to the Governor's Office. The facility did not see any patients during the time it was slated to operate in Seattle.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

IMO, the only thing that is going to clear this up is to know the mortality displacement or excess.

Take average mortality rates over the flu season for a 10 year period in a given country or region, compare with current mortality of this season, compute the difference.

field hospital deployed to CenturyLink Field Event Center to the U.S. Department of Defense.

The 250-bed facility, for which setup began on March 30, was intended to help Washington state's health care system tend to non Covid-19 patients in the event of a hospital surge.

But just three days after announcing the facility was ready to receive patients, officials say they're returning the hospital to the federal government.

The action is aimed at helping another state with a more significant need for hospital capacity at this time, according to the Governor's Office. The facility did not see any patients during the time it was slated to operate in Seattle.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? [illegible] can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

So @theatlantic is just making things up at this point. The story claims that ~1 in 1,000 people under 35 who are infected with #sarscov2 will die of #Covid. This figure is off by at least 20-fold and probably more. The risk for anyone under 25 is so low as to be ~unmeasurable...

And the risk for people 25-35 is tiny, except for people with SEVERE comorbidities - morbid obesity, mostly. These charts - from an article LINKED TO BY @theatlantic - tell the tale. The top shows 1-in-10,000 deaths in people below 50.

I don't really agree with this. The annual @cdcgov estimates for flu clearly refer to "symptomatic cases" and show a CFR in the 0.09% to 0.13% range. Maybe the IFR is 1/2 that - 0.05% or so. The problem is the IFR for the ro was vastly overestimated...

And further that no one understood (or if they did, they weren't telling) how stratified the risks were by age and severe comorbidities.

But the fact is that it was the 1% topline mortality number that got attention, not the comparison to flu. Bc 1% of 330 million is... a lot.

2/ What's interesting: elite media outlets both press mask wearing and claim it has strong support aside from Fox News watching miscreants.

Then why would Biden walk away from a position he took under a month ago?

I wonder what the internal polling/focus groups really show.

Last month, my son's daycare had a coronavirus outbreak.

Another student in his class was positive. Then, my son vomited. I wanted to get him a COVID test.

Even living in a big city with dozens of testing sites, it wasn't easy.

Now do baseball. All those meaningless positive tests, and life went on. There's a lesson here, if you're capable of opening your eyes long enough to see it. I'm in no way being sarcastic - I know you're smart - you just have to shake the ideological blinkers for a few seconds.

> James Surowiecki @JamesSurowiecki
> This is interesting not because they were wrong - lots of people were - but because it tells you how well the NBA has managed to pull off what many thought was an impossible feat. No positive tests, and I don't think anyone would say now that the basketball is crappy or diluted.

1/ Yep, the early/hard lockdown countries are at the leading edge of their second wave: Spain with 78 deaths today (equivalent of 550 in the US) and 9,000 cases (63,000 in US). The question is how many deaths they'll see this time.

Laughably incorrect? The White House's projection in March was that 100K-240K Americans would die from covid under the existing social-distancing regime, which is pretty much what we've followed. That was a pretty good projection.

Mark Spencer @TheDataCage · 10m
If you think the number being attributed to Covid...even with all the examples of aggressive coding...is anywhere close to accurate, then we might as well not continue. You clearly have some type of anxiety disorder that fear feeds and I cannot help you.

James Surowiecki @JamesSurowiecki · 7m
It has nothing to do with coding. It's excess deaths, which will be well over 200K+ by the end of the year. If you want to pretend that somehow 200K more Americans haven't died this year than otherwise would have, I cannot help you.

But we have no idea how many of those deaths are #Covid-related and how many are lockdown/delayed care/panic related. The Covid numbers are garbage because PCR tests catch many people who have already recovered, and states use those results to classify deaths as Covid-related.

I have no idea what the real breakdown is and no one else does either. But even a 5 percent lockdown/panic increase in the mortality rate in "naturally occurring" (non-covid) deaths would account for about 100,000 of the 200,000 excess deaths so far this year...

Do you think it's impossible that the lockdowns and panic and the economic despair and anxiety and delayed treatments and bad care they have produced have caused a 5% increase in mortality this year? Because I sure don't.

Hadn't seen this before - thanks for it. Yes, in hearing from family members, I think the isolation has terribly affected both patients themselves and quality of care. These are rough, poorly paid jobs at the best of times; families are a crucial check on care.

BTW: not that anyone needs to trash the idiotic Sturgis study any further - it has been weighed in the balance and found wanting - but it's worth noting no medical journal would touch it. It was posted on the website of the "Institute of Labor Economics."

Sorry, there's NO consistent evidence that lockdowns work. A handful of small well-run Nordic countries did better than Sweden; and the East Asian countries have had low rates despite wildly inconsistent policies (Japan did basically nothing)...

I have no idea. You have to compare countries that are at similar stages of economic development if you want to make a meaningful comparison.

So we're not starting at the same place. The strategy is not zero cost. Thus your evidence doesn't have to be as strong as mine to make your case; it has to be FAR STRONGER.

The fact it's neither simply makes the anti-lockdown argument either - as Europe has now recognized.

Of course the reason this is so relevant is it puts in context the fact that up to half of #COVID deaths occur in nursing home residents. #Covid mostly targets those at the end of their lives, people who would have died very soon anyway. For this we punish children.

If half of nursing-home residents die in five months, then the entire nursing-home population is effectively dying every 10 months. Start in Jan, by beginning of June, half are dead. Fill back up, and by beginning of Nov. half are dead again.

James Surowiecki @JamesSurowiecki · 5m

There are roughly 1.3 million nursing-home residents in the US. Your numbers imply that 1.3 million die every year (well, more actually, since that's every 10 months). That's around half of all US deaths. You think nursing-home residents account for 1/2 of all deaths in the US?

In all, 30% to 40% of nursing home residents die every year (I've seen both estimates). That's consistent with the five-month figure, and would result in 400K to 500K deaths a year based on the 1.3 million number, or about 15% of US deaths. Do you find that implausible? I don't.

You are misunderstanding the math here. The average is much longer than the median (14 months versus 5). There's a pool of patients who live quite a while. So no, not every bed turns every 10 months; but a new admission has only a 50% change of living more than 5 months...

James Surowiecki @JamesSurowiecki · 3m
I am not misunderstanding the math. You didn't say a new admission has a 50% chance of living more than 5 months. You said half of all nursing-home residents die within 5 months. That, by definition, means that 50% of the population dies every 5 months.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 1m
You're right, I misspoke in that first tweet - I think I was short on space. The correct phrase should be "someone admitted to a nursing home has a 50% chance of dying in five months." The fundamental point remains; [illegible] attacks people at the end of their lives...

As the nursing home data proves in aggregate (and the individual cases prove, well, individually)... so pretending that it is killing the "average" 75-year-old, with a life expectancy of 11 years, misrepresents what's happening until it's unrecognizable as reality.

No, I misspoke and corrected the error, as I do when I make one. Like I said, the fundamental point is unchanged. #COVID19 is killing very, very sick people. That's why the death rates are so low for people under 30 (and many of those people were profoundly ill).

James: Are you seriously disputing the fact that up to 1/2 of all #COVID deaths occur in nursing home residents proves that people who die from (or with) #COVID had on average far shorter life expectancies than other people the same age? And if so, what evidence do you have?

The companies running vaccine trials - with a huge $ stake in the outcome - are seeing partial results (safety data, at least) in real-time instead of allowing independent reviewers alone watch the data until the trials are done and datasets locked. This is unusual and dangerous.

Interesting theory from a scientist about the Dutch mask study - he thinks they didn't have enough infections on either side to reach any conclusion either way (this would be anti-mask, but a marginal result).

Primary

In the power analysis of the Dutch mask study they say,

"Power calculation with an infection frequency of 2 % in the study period, an expected reduction of the risk to 1 % should be demonstratable with a power of 80 % and a p-value of 5 %, if including a total of 4,636 patients randomized 1:1. If the infection frequency is higher the power of the study will be higher. With an expected defection of 20 % a total of 6,000 participants will be included."

A 2% infection frequency in the study period would have translated to almost 120,000 infections in the month from April 7 to May 7, in reality there were only 5000 detected cases in that timeframe. Even assuming they were missing 90% (like CDC estimates in US) that would mean that they undershot by over 50%. So the power of the study was much lower than expected--which means it will be consigned to the file drawer or be dumped into a crummy journal maybe before the end of the year.

TLDR: they saw no effect, but due to lack of infections overall in Denmark, the reviewers

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

Hey, remember back in March, when 3 million people filed for unemployment the first week of the lockdowns and @annielowrey - of @theatlantic, naturally - said she hoped way more people would lose their jobs?

We went over 60 million today. Congrats, Annie.

It would be better if the 3.3 million initial-claims number were higher: We want people to stop working to help stem the public-health catastrophe, and we want UI to cover everyone who has lost work.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

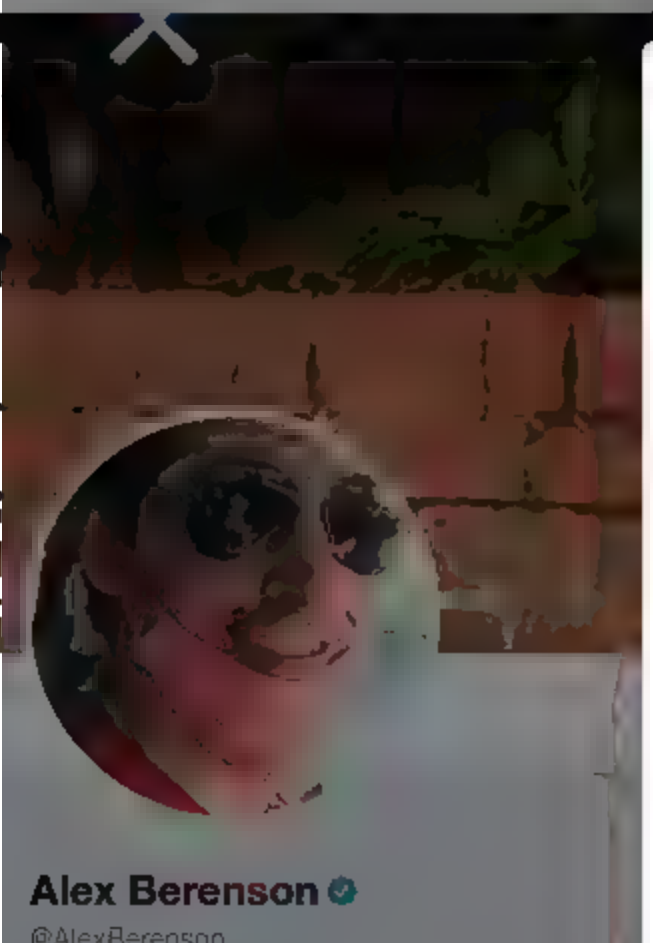
4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

7 22 152

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · ápr. 8.



5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to

Nobody says COVID-19 is not real, that it can't tax hospitals or kill people, esp. if they are over 75 or have comorbidities. But right now the best CURRENT projection is for 61,000 US deaths. That was the 2017 flu season. Why have we shut the country?

1/ So I don't want to go too far down the hole of arguing about #COVID death counts, but a reader pointed out a very odd change to the way Massachusetts is reporting deaths. Until April 6, the state reported deaths by day - that day, it reported 29. See below..

Long-Term Care Facilities Reporting At Least One Case of COVID-19	119
Hospitalization
Patient was hospitalized	1241
Patient was not hospitalized	3942
Under investigation	8654

These data are cumulative and current as of April 6, 2020 at 12:30PM

where and how SARS-CoV-2 is transmitted. Methods: Case reports were extracted from the local Municipal Health Commissions of 320 prefectural cities (municipalities) in China, not including Hubei province, between 4 January and 11 February 2020. We identified all outbreaks involving three or more cases and reviewed the major characteristics of the enclosed spaces in which the outbreaks were reported and associated indoor environmental issues. Results: Three hundred and eighteen outbreaks with three or more cases were identified, involving 1245 confirmed cases in 120 prefectural cities. We divided the venues in which the outbreaks occurred into six categories: homes, transport, food, entertainment, shopping, and miscellaneous. Among the identified outbreaks, 53.8% involved three cases,

From Switzerland: Dr. Daniel Koch, a top Swiss public health official, says not only are kids at minimal risk from #COVID, bc they have such low viral loads, "it is adults who infect children, not the other way around."

Switzerland reopens schools May 11.

We've closed schools because kids aren't the only ones in them.

But we definitely need to NOT wait until Sept. to reopen them.

Ohio hospitals are losing $42 million a day? That implies a loss of about $1.2 billion a day - $36 billion a month -for hospitals nationally. That figure cannot possibly continue.

I received several e-mails from students who told me that their parents are not allowing them to go outside AT ALL. These kids, who are already dealing with the normal struggles of being teenagers, and who are doing so in a time of significantly increased mental health problems and take them, and I'm very worried that they're "learning" during all of this that their parents are cruel and that we don't want them around any longer since I have to keep telling them they can't go anywhere even when I do go shopping or something. We're doing our best and they seem ok even as they're getting more and more

2/ Kids with special needs are particularly hard hit.

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

I am a pediatric physical therapist working (and a co-owner) in a clinic that provides physical, occupational and speech therapy services to children with various disabilities including cerebral palsy, autism spectrum disorder and various genetic and neurological diagnoses. We have been deemed an essential service and have kept our doors open after modifying the environment with enhanced sanitation and a "virtual" waiting room. However, the parents of our children are being told that their children are at very high risk to develop complications if their child contracts Covid-19. I have been unable to find any

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of motion and strength. Children with autism are becoming disregulated without their therapies resulting in increased behavior problems and creating chaos in their families as they struggle to understand the changes on their schedule and lack appropriate interventions.

This has been weighing on my mind and I appreciate you asking for input. This is a small

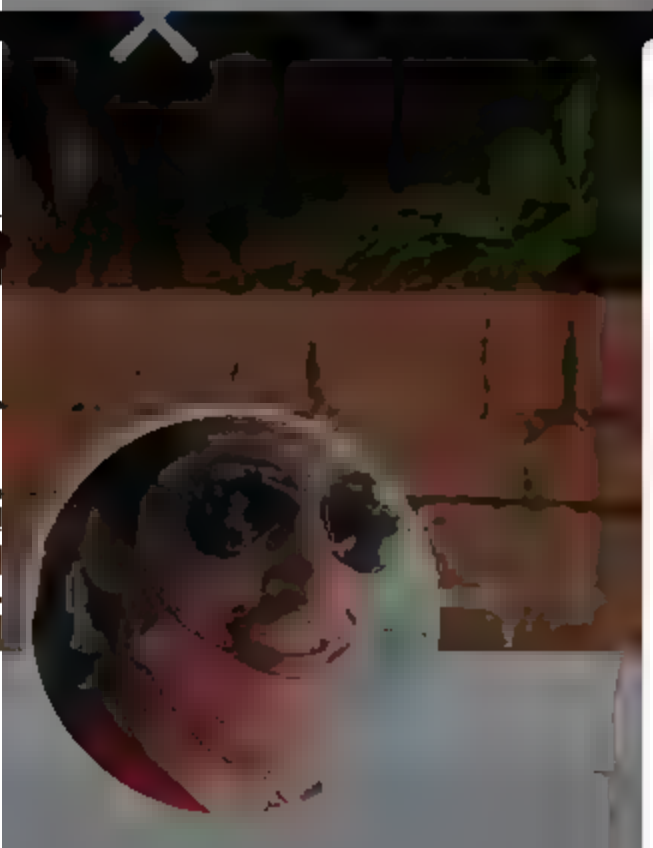
3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.



My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of high school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital Ppl who oppose reopening say it's too early, we're not ready--which is to say THEY aren't ready.

So then don't go out. But let those of us who are ready go out. Extend the provision to owners/employees: If you aren't ready, stay home. Businesses won't be at full capacity anyway

Incredible data from Oregon suggesting much of the recent rise in all-cause mortality is lockdown rather than #Covid related - that people may simply be dying at home because they are too frightened to go to hospitals and failing to get medical treatment for other conditions.

Holy moly, Batman. This study out of Japan (where testing is uncommon) suggests the real infection rate there is 400 to 800 times (!) the reported rate (and, like many European cities, Kobe, Japan had a 3% antibody rate by early April). medrxiv.org/content/10.110 …

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

The move towards a second lockdown in Britain hasn't received enough attention - the government, insanely, has banned ALL GATHERINGS of more than six people "indoors and outdoors." Marshals will enforce the rule, and violators will be fined.

Strangely, restaurants will stay open - to groups of fewer than six. Funerals and weddings are exempt too. But no birthdays, no holiday parties, no hanging out for the weekend with friends.

And the rule is expected to last through the spring!

Very hopeful findings from this @Kff poll: in July, 60% of Americans thought the worst of #Covid was still to come. Only 20% thought it was behind us.

Today those figures are equal - 38% each. No wonder Team Apocalypse is getting more and more desperate.

Reality always wins.

No, it (H1N1) killed up to 575,400 worldwide, per @cdcgov.

Yeah, super-annoying when someone jumps on a trivial mistake to try to discredit you, isn't it?

The non-trivial part is the age distribution, though. H1N1 killed more than 1,200 people under 18 - more than 10x as many as have died from #Covid...

Hey, remember when Tom Inglesby hadn't lost his mind? Remember when he actually "followed the science" and worried about the costs of harsh government actions like lockdowns instead of cheerleading for Team Apocalypse?

I do. It was February.

I'm in Colombia, the number of people killed by the police already rises to 10, after yesterday's protests. Unfortunately, the scene today looks bad (police stations on fire, police shooting civilians in different areas of Bogotá, etc.)

Okay, so your first clue this is bunkum is on THE VERY FIRST PAGE: Note when the paper was received. Yep, March 22, basically before the epidemic had EVEN begun in the United States or social distancing had been in place for very long anywhere else.

In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

But without comparing countries that DIDN'T lock down to those that did, they have no way of knowing if the decrease from the early rapid spread simple represents the natural and normal track of the virus...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

They find almost no correlation between individual lockdown policies and ANY meaningful change in growth (to get around this little problem they create two catch-all categories called “other social distance” and “home isolation” which supposedly produce results.)

Yes, this blue check is comparing #Covid - which after six months of media hysteria has killed ~15,000 Americans under 55, roughly as many who have died in car accidents in the same period - to World War 2.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

7 22 152

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4月8日

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6 37 222

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4月8日

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to

Nobody says COVID-19 is not real, that it can't tax hospitals or kill people, esp. if they are over 75 or have comorbidities. But right now the best CURRENT projection is for 61,000 US deaths. That was the 2017 flu season. Why have we shut the country?

Health and the CDC did not begin community surveillance for COVID-19 in Santa Clara County until March 5. Samples were collected from 226 coughing, feverish patients who visited four urgent care centers; 1 in 4 turned out to have the flu. The state tested samples from a subset of 79 non-flu patients. Nine of them had COVID-19.

The result suggested that 8% of people walking into the urgent care centers carried the novel coronavirus, an measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. 2/ 76 patients at a major hospital in Spain were randomized prospectively 2-1 to the drug (calcifediol) or placebo; only 1 of the 50 who received calcifediol required ICU admission, compared to 13 of the 26 who did not. That's a huge gap...

3/ And it reaches statistical significance despite the small size of the trial, and even after accounting for confounders (the arms were relatively balanced, but more in the placebo arm had hypertension). Obviously, the usual caveats apply - this is small and single-site...

4/ But at the least, it suggests a major RCT in calcifediol would be a good idea (I don't know if one is ongoing).

This is great! If I wanted to ensure @foxnews would have me on forever, I couldn't do better than having the advocates who are baying for @tuckercarlson's head telling the Murdochs to ban me.

BTW: masks are almost surely useless (the epidemiology is piling up behind the RCTs.)

If masks don't work - and the evidence from almost everywhere is clear, they don't - what about Japan and Taiwan?

The real answer is likely that they have quietly decided not to test for #sarscov2 - they run far fewer tests than other advanced nations.

No tests, no epidemic.

Taiwan has run 1 #Sarscov2 test for every 280 people - about as many as Mozambique.

Japan has run 1 test for every 75, just behind Guyana.

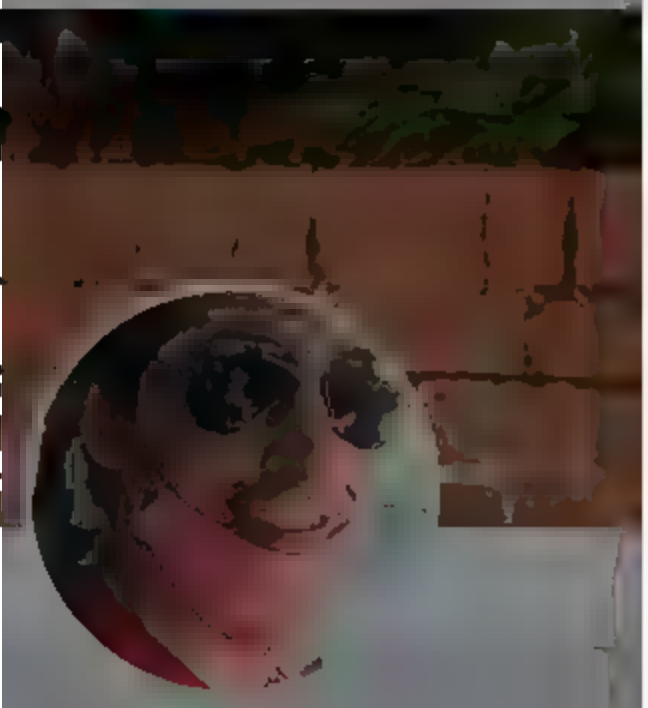
And here's @cdcgov warning ordinary (non-N95) masks will do nothing to protect you against wildfire smoke because "they do not catch small particles."



Fun fact: smoke particles are far larger than #SARSCoV2.

Your mask protects... well, no one.

CDC
Cloth masks that are used to slow the spread of COVID-19 offer little protection against wildfire

They all died, right?

Look, this is not really defensible - it's dumb in the same way people would be dumb to have a party if they knew they had the flu.

But after six months of media hysteria, it's not at all surprising that people at near-zero risk have had enough.

Of course they have reasons. The second-most important is political. The more variables you add, the more chance you have to twist answers to suit your ideology. But the most important is simply that they don't like to be challenged; and complex math is hard to challenge.

Fact check: absolutely false. New York is around 27% positive antibody tests, Madrid at ~10%. The Spanish lockdown was far harsher, longer, and more effective than the one in NYC; it prevented herd immunity and that is probably the reason for what's happening now in Spain.

measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

The refusal to let go of "social distancing" rules despite abundant evidence it's useless in stopping transmission makes it clear this is being used to set a precedent that people shall no longer be permitted to gather in large numbers.

The @imperialcollege paper that @nature published today - the one claiming lockdowns saved 3 million lives in Europe - is a joke too. Three big clues (not including the fact it's from Imperial College and has Professor Pecker as a coauthor, which is dispositive by itself):

3/ To make the numbers work, they theorize transmissibility falls IMMEDIATELY by as much as 80% ON THE DAY LOCKDOWN is imposed (not before, not after, that day) - but then, weirdly, starts to rise again before tapering off. So infections look like this everywhere, even Sweden...

measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. I have a daughter at Purdue, and also know quite a few kids in college. And so, I know that quite a few of them have tested positive. Not one has had more than a headache/cold symptoms. The majority didn't even know (they have random testing). Is this what we're panicking about?

With winter coming (sunlight helps the body make Vitamin D), public health advice for Vitamin D supplements might actually be useful. Hard to see much downside, anyway.

Of course Vitamin D costs about 0.00001% as much as other interventions, so it wouldn't help the #Covideconomy.

The good thing is that in 20 years we'll know all the psychopaths. They won't have fully functioning immune systems because they didn't trade colds as kids so they'll be sick all the time.

The bad thing is there are going to be A LOT of them.

I have at least two more - the absurdity of long-haul Covid (but, sadly, the media is hardly ignoring long-haul) and the dangers of the rush for a vaccine (but that was before the Orange Man came out in favor of a quick vaccine, now we can expect at least some skepticism).

Well well well. @stanford just rebuked the medical school and other professors who complained about @swatlashoover. Worth noting Stanford has had several smart contrarian voices on #Covid.

Subject: Message from Provost and Faculty Senate Chair

Dear Members of the Stanford Community,

We are writing to you in our roles as the Chair of the Faculty Senate and the Provost of the University.

Over the next 7 weeks, many of you will be drawn into political and policy debates as we approach the 2020 national elections. We write to clarify university policy on the question of the academic freedom and expression and dissemination of information in the public sector and about your professional and private opinions.

The University's core functions are teaching, learning, research and scholarship. We foster these goals by [illegible] with a point of view. We acknowledge that diversity and no member of our community should feel that the rights, assured by the Constitution of the United States, are in any way abrogated.

What does this mean in practice? The simple answer is that as an individual, you have total freedom of expression so long as you are not speaking as a representative of the University. You can use your University title and professional affiliations. However, you must make it clear that the views and opinions expressed are your personal views and do not reflect the official policy or position of Stanford. That includes, among other things, asking for, and expecting access to official data on faculty or students including contact information such as the University email [illegible] official Academic Council email list. A letter from some medical school faculty was written and signed consistent with the freedom of faculty to voice their opinions. However the letter was sent blind to all members of the Academic Council using a University email list and that was not consistent with policy. That will not happen again.

These next few months are going to be hard. In fact, it has been a difficult year. We are going to disagree. That is inevitable. But it is these disagreements that define us and create an environment that fuels intellectual curiosity. We encourage respectful and active debate in appropriate venues.

We are both always available for questions.

Best wishes

The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

276 2,1 tys. 2,3 tys.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

2/ And, btw, other possibly relevant factors, like, oh, COPD, are considered secondary. The rules "are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not."

IMO, the only thing that is going to clear this up is to know the mortality displacement or excess.

Take average mortality rates over the flu season for a 10 year period in a given country or region, compare with current mortality of this season, compute the difference.

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

65 211 760

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4月5日

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4月5日

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

The 250-bed facility, for which setup began on March 30, was intended to help Washington state's health care system tend to non Covid-19 patients in the event of a hospital surge.

But just three days after announcing the facility was ready to receive patients, officials say they're returning the hospital to the federal government.

The action is aimed at helping another state with a more significant need for hospital capacity at this time, according to the Governor's Office. The facility did not see any patients during the time it was slated to operate in Seattle.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

In a normal investigative reporting world the biggest question being chased right now might be how the guy who predicted "mad sheep" and nine-figure bird flu deaths and whose model depends on 13-year-old code he hasn't released somehow has the ear of the world's governments.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8.04

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

7 22 152

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8.04

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help

4/ High school seniors are being denied their only chance at graduation and prom:

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?

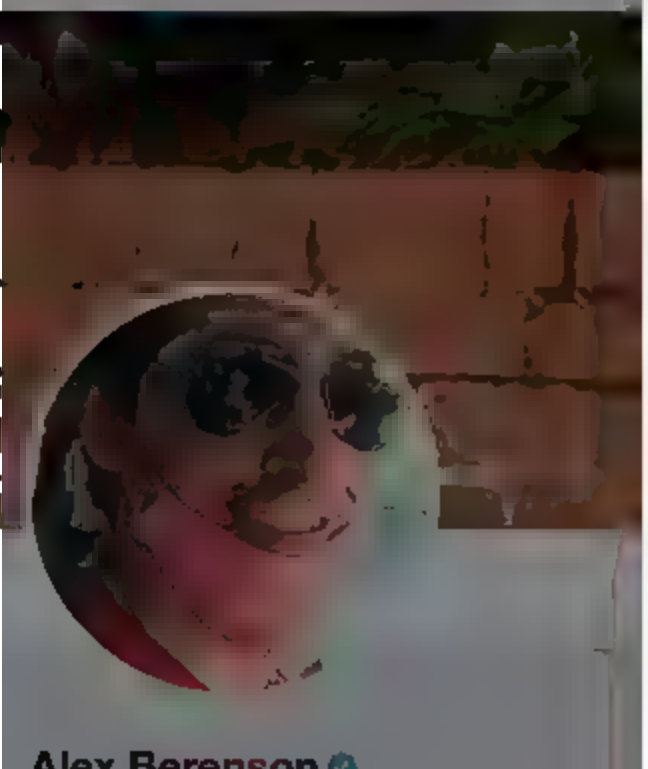
So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.



> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

Have to say this email felt good... especially the point that Team Reality transcends politics.

Let's all keep fighting for the truth and against hysteria.

AA mail.google.com

You can find me on LinkedIn, if interested.

You state in a tweet, "...How many of us are out there battling for the truth - 50? 100 at most? No more, surely...". Fortunately, you don't know how far you are from the truth on this one. Your research, data, presentation has gotten a lot of us to step up and share broadly when previously we'd have kept our starched business profiles more pristine than entering the fray. For myself, I've seen ardent never-trumpers choose to reshare posts calling out the panic porn - so it transcends politics.

Can we make one for WA too? We were one of the earliest to shut down and still our phases are completely paused. We are no plans to move forward and are stuck in the status quo which won't work for most biz once rains come. Even Bay Area is opening

This prediction unfortunately came true today - for Spain, which reported 156 #Covid deaths, equal to 1,100 in the US. Hospital admits are spiking too. The news will likely get worse before it gets better.

But Spain says no second lockdown. They get it.

The one real surprise in all of this is Germany, which somehow seems to have dodged both a first and a second wave. I have read various explanations but none particularly convincing.

It's so fun to pretend #sarscov2 is so different than other viruses, isn't it? More contagious, more lethal, easily able to reinfect, et cetera, ad infinitum.

Because otherwise we'd be stuck admitting we blew up the world for flu-plus. And that's no fun!

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

Fact check: you can't be this dumb.

Even if the herd immunity estimate of 60% is right (it's wrong), this CNN doesn't know the difference between reported cases and actual infections, which are 10x as high. So his estimate is off by a factor of at least 10x (likely much more)...

Answers to common questions about how schools are operating under restrictions due to the COVID-19 epidemic. Updated May 5th, 2020.

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

Today Amazon refused to publish my booklet about the coronavirus because it "did not comply" with their (undisclosed) guidelines. This is outrageous censorship from a company that has gained hugely from lockdowns - and dominates the US book market, especially with stores closed!

measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. The @imperialcollege paper that @nature published today - the one claiming lockdowns saved 3 million lives in Europe - is a joke too. Three big clues (not including the fact it's from Imperial College and has Professor Pecker as a coauthor, which is dispositive by itself):

2/ They estimate the lockdown reduced deaths in Sweden by 90% - though, say it with me, SWEDEN DID NOT HAVE A LOCKDOWN...

3/ To make the numbers work, they theorize transmissibility falls IMMEDIATELY by as much as 80% ON THE DAY LOCKDOWN is imposed (not before, not after, that day) - but then, weirdly, starts to rise again before tapering off. So infections look like this everywhere, even Sweden...

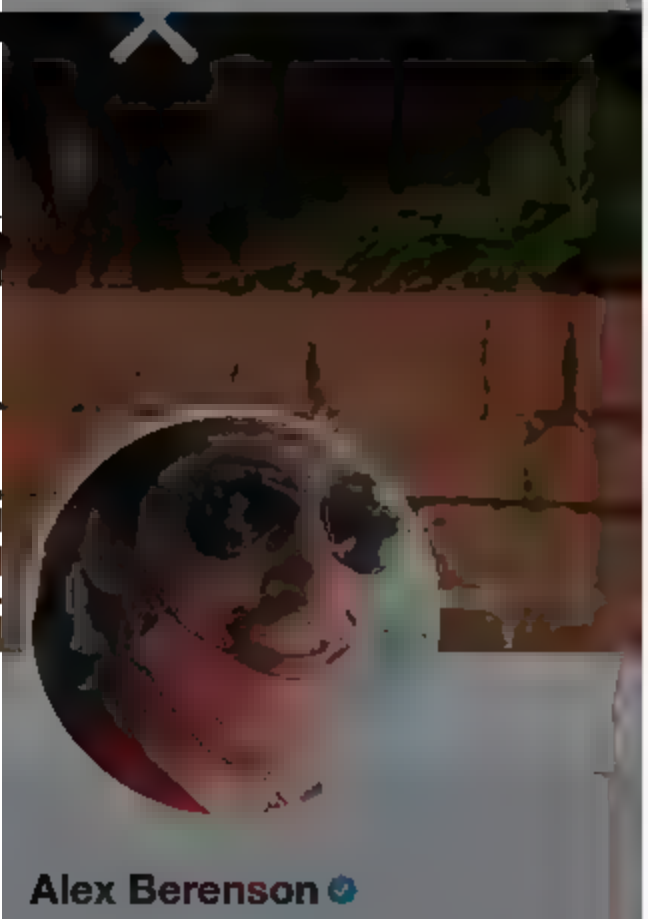
There are approximately 328.2 million people in the US.

To get to the low end of herd immunity, about 60% of the population must catch Covid.



That's about 196,920,000 cases.

The current US death rate is about measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a

When the right deserts Twitter en masse @Jack will have only himself to blame. And the country will be poorer for it. As bad as Twitter can be it is a place both sides can interact and debate (even if the left is now aggressively blockchaining and shadowbanning people like me).

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

Wow. @nature published a paper claiming that lockdowns cut the spread of #COVID-19 by hundreds of millions of cases. The @Washingtonpost (inevitably) lapped it up. A look at the paper reveals it is more full of holes than the mask I have (not) worn all week. Let's discuss...

In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

But without comparing countries that DIDN'T lock down to those that did, they have no way of knowing if the decrease from the early rapid spread simple represents the natural and normal track of the virus...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. Even @nytimes is no longer playing down the violence spike in New York. Unfortunately, since this article ran two weeks ago, things have only gotten worse. Murders have nearly doubled in the last four weeks compared to 2019.

Obviously, the solution is to defund the police.

A Violent August in N.Y.C.: Shootings Double, and Murder Is Up by 50%

The city recorded 242 shootings in August, up from 91 last year, continuing a summer spike in gun violence that has become an issue in the presidential race.

About Kawasaki Disease

Kawasaki disease (KD), also known as Kawasaki syndrome, is an acute febrile illness of unknown etiology that primarily affects children younger than 5 years of age. The disease was first described in Japan by Tomisaku Kawasaki in 1967, and the first cases outside of Japan were reported in Hawaii in 1976.

Clinical signs include fever, rash, swelling of the hands and feet, irritation and redness of the whites of the eyes, swollen lymph glands in the

Q&A about school restrictions due to COVID-19

Polski | Icelandic

Answers to common questions about how schools are operating under restrictions due to the COVID-19 epidemic. Updated May 5th, 2020.

See also:

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

I literally cannot believe this man ever worked for the NYT's... He ruthlessly nails progressive dogmas with a passion that I haven't seen since Thomas Sowell.

And if I were in the criminal justice reform business, I might take a breath and stop advocating for the endless release of criminals - certainly violent criminals - until I figured out why my policies appear to be causing carnage in the neighborhoods I claim I want to help.

1/ [illegible] appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for [illegible] patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

57 160 394

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

At this point, given the LA/Santa Clara/NY pregnant/Chelsea MA/Boston homeless/Johnson County/German/French carrier data - and the EMPTY hospitals - in any rational world, our conversation would be immediately turning to how quickly we can end the lockdowns and open schools.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

1/ As you sit home watching #COVID death counts spiral, please know the official @CDCgov guidance for coding COVID-related deaths is as follows: any death where the disease "caused or is assumed to have caused or contributed to death." Confirmed lab tests are not required...

NVSS National Vital Statistics System

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

At this point, given the LA/Santa Clara/NY pregnant/Chelsea MA/Boston homeless/Johnson County/German/French carrier data - and the EMPTY hospitals - in any rational world, our conversation would be immediately turning to how quickly we can end the lockdowns and open schools.

So we'll just keep pretending this death count is a real number, huh? That the 40-cycle PCR testing doesn't lead to massive false positives and the way we then match those positive tests to death certificates does not falsely link an unknown but large number of deaths to #covid?

Throughout the piece, he compares #Covid to the original SARS and MERS, pointing out both those illnesses can have long-term impacts. SARS and MERS are caused by coronaviruses, so the comparison seems reasonable.

It isn't. SARS and MERS are far more dangerous than Sars-Cov-2...

Three in a row:
A woman, 90, in renal and heart failure
A man, 84, with prostate cancer, dementia, and heart disease
A man, 88, with heart and renal failure, afib, diabetes, and Parkinson's (yes, all five, can't make it up).

All in the first 20 cases. All called Covid.

Whenever I see someone tracking "cases" without reference to hospitalizations or deaths, I tune out. I'm in favor of as many mild or asymptomatic cases as possible. Unless you have high confidence in a vaccine, so should everybody else who wants this to end this century.

BTW, France just reported 13,500 positive tests in a day - about equal to the US per-capita peak. The lie that "Europe can open schools but we can't because they controlled transmission and we didn't," is, well, a lie.

We can't open schools because of unions and lawyers. Period.

I know. Many cases under the tab for Covid cases don't. They are likely either retrospective death certificate matching to positive tests (though these are all recent) or "suspected" cases without a positive test.

You can see the data here.

I think several things can be simultaneously true:
1) We are certainly overcounting the true number of COVID deaths.
2) Overcounting is better than undercounting for policy making and data acquisition.
3) Overcounting is worse than undercounting for administrative evaluation.

Has a single student attending college died of #Covid since colleges reopened? The answer looks to be no. One student in Texas got very sick, and a handful of hospitalizations have been reported. But no deaths.

Given Team Apocalypse's love of outlier cases, they would have been.

For context, most universities have been open for a month or more, and about 12 million students attend four-year colleges (though many are not currently on campus).

I thought we all should be reading Orwell - and we should - but it turns out Asimov is required too.

I have heard of many similar cases; college students are openly contemptuous of what their schools are doing. Having seen firsthand how dangerous the ro isn't, they have had enough viral theater. And they are sick of administrators finger-wagging at them.

> My son attends college Plays Div 1 soccer. He had a friend on the girls team test positive and called to let us know. He told us that if he starts feeling sick he will not tell anyone because the entire team would be shut down. Two days later he called. Lost his sense of taste and smell. Otherwise felt great. The next day he had a little congestion. I could tell talking to him but nobody else noticed. He continued to train and felt great. This happened Labor Day weekend. He is just getting his smell back. Taste has been back for about a week. He never stopped training or going to class. I am sure there are many kids doing the same thing as they do not want to stay locked up in their rooms.

Unfortunately a lot of people either never get told or never learn for themselves that shit happens. A lot of bad things happen to good people. There's a lot of randomness in life. You just take it in stride and move on.

I'm not talking about #Covid. About three million Americans will die of all causes this year. Even with our insane counting rules, fewer than 10% will be #Covid-linked. Worldwide, 60 million people will die; maybe 2% of the deaths will be #Covid.

We have lost all perspective.

What's killing those people?

1) Covid
2) Lockdowns (everything from overdoses to deaths of Alzheimer's patients denied the chance to see their families)
3) Terrible iatrogenic care in March and April

We have no idea how many fall in each basket, so I don't guess.

Dan O'Brien @DanOBrienPoker

Important to note that you can very easily track excess mortality over the mean on the CDC website. Last I checked the number was somewhere around 200k excess deaths, so if the truthers have a better hypothesis for what is killing these additional people they should share it.

Unleash an intense stressor (fear of dying horribly) onto a population via the media, politicians, and medical professionals for months-on-end and see what happens.

I bet that alone would affect the death rate.

After watching my father on dialysis for several years, it isn't much of a life. Everything centered around 4 hours in dialyisis 3 days away. Those days gone since totally wiped. The remaining days may be ok -- it depends -- but can't do much since dialysis is the next day.

How is this complicated? About 3 million Americans will die from all causes this year. Just like last year. The vast majority of these deaths have nothing to do with [illegible]. We cannot stop them. They are not about more or better health care. They are a function of life.

It has been obvious since March that childless adults were more willing to support lockdowns and school closures than people with kids. For most folks with children, the idea of putting life in statis is repugnant. And punishing kids for a virus that is ~0 risk to them is worse.

To my ny friends (I used to live there b4 moving to fla in march).

Schools in Fla have been open for over a month. HS sports are being played with fans. The economy is open and booming.

Your kids are getting screwed to make a political point.

Maybe try imagining it the other way, @olgakhazan? The world in which we extend the lives of people who have already lived 70 or 80 years at the cost of those who have 70 or 80 left? How is that defensible morally OR rationally?

I want to know if people think that after what we are doing to our kids and the younger people these days if they feel when we are 70-80 they will care at all if presented with the same scenario. My guess is after what we have done kids say too bad so sad!

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

64 210 778

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 5. апр

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

33 188 638

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 5. апр

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?

2/ And that based on where we are right now, it is possible almost EVERY positive is false (even if the test is overall quite accurate - a 2% false positive rate doesn't matter much if 20% of the population is actually infected, but it is terrible if 1% is infected)...

Thats not how the math works. His point is we test so many people that with a 1% false positive rate the # of positive cases is dramatically inflated and the actual # of cases is a low. If 1% of those with covid as cause of death are false positives, that's 2k people

No, it's that 1 percent of tests come back with a false positive. That doesn't sound like much, but if the real incidence is only 0.5%, it means 2/3s of all tests will be falsely positive (1 / 1 + 0.5).

First, you are guessing at the actual incidence percentage. If testing is so bad, you dont know how many people actually have Covid. Correct ? 2nd. Its not 2/3 of ALL TESTs will be false+. IF if your incidence rate is correct, it means 2/3 of Positive tests will be in error.

Mark Cuban @mcuban · 1h

But the reality is that getting multiple tests, particularly from multiple test providers dramatically reduces the incidence of false positives to near zero. The problem becomes the cost, lack of availability and slowness of results.

Many IgM antibody tests rapidly reverted to negative after being positive. So point-in-time antibody testing almost certainly UNDERESTIMATES exposure (which may be why it is so hard to get over 20% antibody positives in broad population studies)...

A good and clear explanation of death certificate matching from Michigan:

MDHHS issues statement about COVID-19 death data

Additional statistics added to today's update

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
April 16, 2020
Contact: Lynn Sutfin, 517-241-2112

LANSING, MICH. The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) released the following statement about today's update of COVID-19 death statistics.

Maintained in the state's Vital Records reporting system, a death is classified as COVID-19 if the person who died had tested positive for COVID-19 infection as a contributing factor to death and compared against all laboratory-confirmed cases of COVID-19 in the Michigan Disease Surveillance System (MDSS). If a death certificate is matched to a confirmed COVID-19 case and that record in the MDSS does not indicate a death, the MDSS record is updated to indicate the death and the appropriate local health department is notified.

These matches deaths are then included with mortality information posted to Michigan.gov/coronavirus. As of April 10, this process added 39 deaths. As a result of this process, records that identify C as a contributing factor to de ed against all laboratory confi COVID-19 in the Michigan Dis ance System (MDSS). If a death te is matched to a confirmed d that record in the MDSS doe a death, the MDSS record is u te the death and the appropr lepartment is notified.

This phenomenon is also visible in reverse in their feeble ex post facto explanations of hard lockdown countries having second waves (eg Spain): they don't have enough contract tracers! They stay up too late! - when the real answer is quite simple: lockdown too hard, no immunity.

The rolling seven-day average for #Covid deaths in Spain - which had an deeply harsh lockdown this spring - has now passed the US.

Transmission now or transmission later, those are your choices. But if you lockdown at the wrong time, as Spain did, you get the worst of both.

The sudden rise in the number of virus cases in Tokyo and the government's strong actions immediately after the Olympic postponement have raised questions in parliament and among citizens about whether Japan understated the extent of the outbreak and delayed enforcement of social distancing articles were wrong, and have more on the way. You do not understand what Japan did. There's a difference between blustering and studying interesting examples that break (some people's) expectations.

Reporters on the ground in Japan described repeated failures of Japan's system to control #Covid and prospectively predicted a dangerous epidemic.

That epidemic did not occur.

good point. Japan never closed their schools , never locked-down their nation yet they did better than most. Probably due to all the green tea and Tobacco they consume.

Team Apocalypse: so busy explaining away good news in places like Japan that they don't have time to cover what's actually happening.

Has there ever been a bigger reporting failure than this one? Certainly not in the US. I know you'll all say Duranty, but that was just one guy.

And I'm old enough to remember when Japan was supposedly hiding its outbreak so Tokyo wouldn't lose the Olympics. More excellent epidemiology, am I right? The nice thing about explaining after the fact is you can always fit the target to the cluster.

Florida reopens: DeSantis lifts remaining coronavirus restrictions

By GRAY ROHRER and AUSTIN FULLER
ORLANDO SENTINEL
SEP 25, 2020 AT 12:19 PM

TALLAHASSEE – Bars and restaurants are no longer required to operate at less than full capacity, as Gov. Ron DeSantis issued an executive order Friday removing all remaining restrictions on businesses because of the coronavirus pandemic.

But the executive order, which takes effect immediately, also prohibits local governments from closing businesses or collecting fines related to pandemic-related mandates, such as mask requirements.

What's interesting is that Team Apocalypse isn't even trying to pretend these local changes will lead to disaster anymore, they're simply ignoring them and sticking with absurd claims about what will happen nationally after November (waaaait two months!).

Study this chart. and tell me 1) the draconian quarantines are anything but a panic-driven reaction; and 2) the most vulnerable - 65 and older - weren't the most impacted by the quarantine policies of blue state governors. Open the schools! Protect the seniors! Vote out Dems!

Twitter blocked Alex Berenson's tweet. It was a chart from the CDC showing an infinitesimal number of all deaths of children 0-15 from Feb-Sep 2020 were from COVID, while the vast majority were people 65 and older. Twitter is just interfering with free speech at this point...

They have only one thing in common; they know the media is offering a false picture about the real dangers of the coronavirus and the prospect of ever-increasing government interference in their lives terrifies them.

Is that enough for a coalition? I have no idea.

1/ [redacted] appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for [redacted] patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? [illegible] can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

20 97 371

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

This is the natural history of #SarsCov2. IT IS THE SAME EVERYWHERE. (The US has gone through two geographically distinct epidemics.) Closing schools, lockdowns, masks - everything is theater. Impossibly expensive, societally devastating theater.

Florida: 223,000 positive #SARSCoV2 tests in three weeks - 10,000 a day - and ~NO CHANGE in hospitalizations or ICU occupancy statewide. You say epidemic, I say a lot of people getting colds, let's call the whole thing off. (We'll see if Florida has any excess mortality in July.)

Yep, #COVID deaths have soared all the way to an average of 35 a day, where they were in mid-May, when the state had about 1/5 as many cases.

Ahh, the CNN can google. What's fascinating about this definition: "truther" stands so far linguistically from similar words:

Those words mean just what you'd expect: "one who..." Thus we redefine the act of telling the truth as believing in conspiracy.

So much for the "if you build it; they will come" mantra.

Looks like despite our best efforts to be overwhelmed, we're not.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

From Sweden: a new study shows at least 11 percent of people in Stockholm have #COVID antibodies (meaning they already have had COVID and recovered). The actual number is likely much higher. (Another scientist in the article says the real figure is 1/3.)

1/ So I don't want to go too far down the hole of arguing about #COVID death counts, but a reader pointed out a very odd change to the way Massachusetts is reporting deaths. Until April 6, the state reported deaths by day - that day, it reported 29. See below..

Long-Term Care Facilities Reporting At Least One Case of COVID-19	119
Hospitalization
Patient was hospitalized	1241
Patient was not hospitalized	3942
Under investigation	8654

These data are cumulative and current as of April 6, 2020 at 12:30PM
*Reflects improved facility definitions and data collection. These include positive cases at nursing homes, rest homes, and skilled nursing facilities

1/ Nate: the Swedes know exactly what they're doing. They provide data on ICU admissions and overall ICU cases. (Remember: ICU admits lag, as do deaths.) There has been no daily spike and overall cases appear to have peaked, suggesting the overall epidemic is well under control.

@NateSilver538 Nate Silver
What I don't totally understand about Sweden is whether this is the outcome they were expecting or not. If you do deliberately half-assed social distancing (not trying to get R < 1) then inevitably a lot of people are going to get infected and die. time.com/5817412/sweden...

Health and the CDC did not begin community surveillance for COVID-19 in Santa Clara County until March 5. Samples were collected from 226 coughing, feverish patients who visited four urgent care centers; 1 in 4 turned out to have the flu. The state tested samples from a subset of 79 non-flu patients. Nine of them had COVID-19.

The result suggested that 8% of people walking into the urgent care centers carried the novel coronavirus, an

April 20.

Retailers will have the option to open May 1, Polis said, as long as they have social-distancing policies in place. Barbers and hair salons could open the following Monday, May 4, he said, although he added telecommuting should be maximized as much as possible, particularly with older employees.

Restaurants and bars will stay closed initially but might be allowed to open in mid-May, he said. Schools will not reopen immediately. Personal service providers, like hair salons, will be able to reopen with some precautions on April 27, such as hair stylists wearing gloves. Gyms, movie theaters, real estate showings — though not open houses — and child care can restart then, too.

Scientist wouldn't go into the ocean for $1 MILLION because of COVID.

Maybe she's a billionaire or something?

> Kim Prather – an atmospheric chemist at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography -- strongly believes that COVID-19 could enter the Pacific and transfer back into the air along the California coast ... possibly infecting anyone still daring to surf, swim or simply take a walk on the beach.
> Prather, who lives in San Diego, tells the L.A. Times ... "I wouldn't go in the water if you paid me $1 million right now."
> According to her research ... Prather's found the ocean contains all kinds of pathogens and constantly sprays these particles into the air, but the scary part is -- she believes the coronavirus is light enough to float through the air much farther than we think.
> Translation - social distancing doesn't work with the ocean. Kim drives the point home by saying ... "It's not going to kill you if you miss a few surfing sessions, but it could if you go out there and get in the wrong air."
> Prather's warning comes as the world's scientists are struggling to determine if COVID-19 can spread by more than just sneezes and coughs.
> Even Dr. Fauci's publicly hinting the virus might be more airborne than originally believed and suggesting it's a good idea for everyone to cover their faces.

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

It's not just NY, either - people are pointing to many examples where the updated @IMHE_UW model does not match CURRENT public data. They had to know this would be scrutinized, given the fact the last version was so off on hospitalizations - how could they have taken it public?

If they had "wanted" to blow up whatever credibility their forecasts had left, it's hard to see how they could have done a better job.

Which raises the question: if the models are useless, what do we do now?

Note: there is one person whose name seems to have been shared publicly on Twitter (it's in the Kang thread), and the name matches that of a real person; but I am not going to mention it as I can't find an official obituary, much less a cause of death.

The kind of insane reporting that is driving the panic: Arizona didn't reduce its request for ventilators because the stockpile is "dwindling" (remember, California just sent back 500 ventilators!) - it reduced its request because IT WON'T NEED THEM.

GLENDALE, Ariz (AP) — With little hope of getting the 5,000 ventilators it requested from the dwindling national stockpile, Arizona has revised its request down to fewer than the 500 it expects to need soon to treat coronavirus patients, the state's health director said.

Most of the ventilators would be used to equip a Phoenix hospital that shut down last year but is being reopened as an acute care facility, Health Services Department Director Dr. Cara Christ said in an interview. About 50 would be sent to the Navajo Nation, where a severe

The takeaway: New York hospitals are very busy but functioning well (thanks to great medical staff!). Patients who need to be admitted are admitted, those who are not are sent home, there is no ventilator shortage and no prospect of one. Even in NYC the acute crisis has passed.

In fact, in region after region it wasn't "reopening" that led to the summer spike -- it was protesting.

Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. It's junk pseudoscience. This "deadly new virus" has never even been isolated.

Analytical Performance:

Limit of Detection (LoD):

LoD studies determine the lowest detectable concentration of 2019-nCoV at which approximately 95% of all (true positive) replicates test positive. The LoD was determined by limiting dilution studies using characterized samples.

The analytical sensitivity of the rRT-PCR assays contained in the CDC 2019 Novel Coronavirus (2019-nCoV) Real-Time RT-PCR Diagnostic Panel were determined in Limit of Detection studies. Since no quantified virus isolates of the 2019-nCoV are currently available, assays designed for detection of the 2019-nCoV RNA were tested with characterized stocks of in vitro transcribed full length RNA (N gene; GenBank accession MN908947.2) of known copy (RNA copies/µL) spiked into a diluent consisting of a suspension of human A549 cells and viral transport medium (VTM) to mimic clinical specimen. Samples were extracted using the QIAGEN EZ1 Advanced XL instrument and EZ1 DSP Virus Kit (Cat# 62724) and manually with the QIAGEN DSP Viral RNA Mini Kit (Cat# 61904). Real-Time RT-PCR assays were performed using the ThermoFisher Scientific TaqPath™ 1 Step RT qPCR Master Mix, CG (Cat# A15299) on the Applied Biosystems™ 7500 Fast Dx Real-Time PCR instrument according to the CDC 2019-nCoV Real-Time RT-PCR Diagnostic Panel instructions for use.

Who wants to tell him close to 45 million people have died this year? And our #Covid overresponse will likely lead to untold deaths of young people worldwide from TB, missed vaccinations, and other causes.

> Kai Kupferschmidt @kakape
> One million people dead from #covid19.
> Imagine losing a mother, a father, a sister, a brother. Multiply that loss, that pain by a thousand then multiply that again by a thousand. That's what we are looking at.
> What a sad day.

Can UK readers please explain why Boris Johnson, who is supposed to be a populist, is edging toward a second lockdown AGAINST THE WISHES OF MUCH OF HIS PARTY? Are Professor Pecker and the Sages really that powerful?

Fact check: untrue. The Sunbelt economies far outperformed the Northeast this summer even though Florida etc had hundreds of thousands of positive tests and NY had almost none.

Most people are now willing to live with the virus. Lockdowns crush economies.

For the next time someone - an @nytimes reporter, say - tells you we don't know enough to reopen schools. California has 9 million kids 17 and under. In seven months, they've had 84,000 "cases" of #Covid.

And two deaths.

9,000,000 kids.
2 deaths.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2020, we tested county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's claim, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives curated by Stanford, and iii) a pooled estimate of i and ii. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County was 1.5% (95% CI 1.1%, 2.1%). The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

So... way back in March I went on @IngrahamAngle and said I thought cannabis and vaping might be related to getting #Covid, and all the usual idiots like @heerjeet had their usual fits and screamed what an idiot I was.

People are so lost in politics that they see this as a political failure. I think it was a systemic failure and this is what has to be fixed. Otherwise we will just think that having another party in charge would solve everything.

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

The refusal to let go of "social distancing" rules despite abundant evidence it's useless in stopping transmission makes it clear this is being used to set a precedent that people shall no longer be permitted to gather in large numbers.

Someone out there doesn't like crowds.

Answers to common questions about how schools are operating under restrictions due to the COVID-19 epidemic. Updated May 5th, 2020.

See also:

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

Wow. @nature published a paper claiming that lockdowns cut the spread of #COVID-19 by hundreds of millions of cases. The @Washingtonpost (inevitably) lapped it up. A look at the paper reveals it is more full of holes than the mask I have (not) worn all week. Let's discuss...

In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

An email from a reader suggesting that mobile phone companies are providing information to state governments for quarantines and contact tracing - can @att @verizon respond?

I had to fly from TX t NY on Wed afternoon this week as I'm selling a home I own there along with a friend of mine. .I arrived at airport late Wednesday, and after exiting the secure area I was met with NY contact tracers asking everyone to fill out a form. They repeatedly told us we weren't required to quarantine, even through the form we were filling out specifically said we had to quarantine. I filled out the form, using my sloppiest handwriting and giving them my google voice phone number which they never called.

On Thursday and Friday, I received multiple calls from "NY Contact Tracing". I never answered the call, and all their messages never asked me to call back.

As I said, I never gave them my AT& cell phone #, even though that's the number they were calling. I never called them back. My friend also received several unanswered calls.

On Saturday morning, my friend and I left for Texas and were out of NY by 7:45am. Neither of us were called by NYS. Not on Monday (the day after they said we had to quarantine). At&T wireless and my friend's Verizon. Obviously, both carriers are supplying information to the state governments.

Please don't use my info / data I want to incur a fine from Cuo Cuome

Thanks again for all you do

My friends phone is on our compa work together, but I use my persor AT&T, and his phone is a company Verizon). He did put his cell phone form

At first I though Airlines tha info, but when they stopped ca left NY, I found that really suspicio

This June paper about PCR cycling, viral loads, and clinical outcomes has a fascinating tidbit - not one of the 678 patients admitted to two NYC hospitals in April had a PCR cycle threshold over 36. (Two-thirds were under 30.)

persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as well hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (27, 28). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. measures in reducing influenza transmission. Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as well hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 27). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. Dr. Kang: Awful news. Don't suppose you could share the names of these doctors, or maybe their ages/residency locations?

I ask only bc I can't find media reports of these deaths; I expected heavy coverage given the focus on outlier cases.

Also, can you tell us more about you?

Nobody says COVID-19 is not real, that it can't tax hospitals or kill people, esp. if they are over 75 or have comorbidities. But right now the best CURRENT projection is for 61,000 US deaths. That was the 2017 flu season. Why have we shut the country?

Turns out the Icelandic #COVID data shows almost the exact fatality rate of the new German data: about 1 in 300 - 6 deaths in 1648 positive tests). Somewhat worse than the flu, though other data suggests the flu is much MORE dangerous to the young.

Very good point about the media focus on outlier cases. They're presenting this infection as though it's a death sentence when of course we know that the majority of people recover at home.

Health and the CDC did not begin community surveillance for COVID-19 in Santa Clara County until March 5. Samples were collected from 226 coughing, feverish patients who visited four urgent care centers; 1 in 4 turned out to have the flu. The state tested samples from a subset of 79 non-flu patients. Nine of them had COVID-19.

The result suggested that 8% of people walking into the urgent care centers carried the novel coronavirus, an

Btw: missed this yesterday, but @GovofCO is ending the Colorado lockdown on May 1 - retail, offices, then bars and restaurants by mid-May. Believe he is the first Democratic governor to take this step. Wonder why no one is screaming about the imminent Rocky Mountain apocalypse.

Some Colorado businesses can reopen May 1 as Polis shifts from stay-at-home to 'safer at home'

Retail businesses will be allowed to reopen May 1, though restaurants and schools will remain closed

Retailers will have the option to open May 1, Polis said, as long as they observe social-distancing policies in place. Business offices can reopen the following Monday, May 4, he said, although he added telecommuting should be maximized as much as possible, particularly with older employees.

I received several e-mails from students who told me that their parents are not allowing them to go outside AT ALL. These kids, who are already dealing with the normal struggles of being teenagers, and who are doing so in a time of significantly increased mental health problems and

2/ Kids with special needs are particularly hard hit.

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

I am a pediatric physical therapist working (and a co-owner) in a clinic that provides physical, occupational and speech therapy services to children with various disabilities including cerebral palsy, autism spectrum disorder and various genetic and neurological diagnoses. We have been deemed an essential service and have kept our doors open after modifying the environment with enhanced sanitation and a "virtual" waiting room. However, the parents of our children are being told that their children are at very high risk to develop complications if their child contracts Covid-19. I have been unable to find any

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of motion and strength. Children with autism are becoming disregulated without their therapies resulting in increased behavior problems and creating chaos in their families as they struggle to understand the changes on their schedule and lack appropriate interventions.

This has been weighing on my mind and I appreciate you asking for input. This is a small

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital

Wait, did @CDCDirector just say the "second wave" of #SARSCoV2 may be much worse because it might happen during flu season?

"We're going to have the flu epidemic and the coronavirus epidemic [at once]."

Doesn't this implicitly suggest...

Oh, never mind.

Holy moly, Batman. This study out of Japan (where testing is uncommon) suggests the real infection rate there is 400 to 800 times (!) the reported rate (and, like many European cities, Kobe, Japan had a 3% antibody rate by early April). medrxiv.org/content/10.110 …

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

Nobody says COVID-19 is not real, that it can't tax hospitals or kill people, esp. if they are over 75 or have comorbidities. But right now the best CURRENT projection is for 61,000 US deaths. That was the 2017 flu season. Why have we shut the country?

1/ Nate: the Swedes know exactly what they're doing. They provide data on ICU admissions and overall ICU cases. (Remember: ICU admits lag, as do deaths.) There has been no daily spike and overall cases appear to have peaked, suggesting the overall epidemic is well under control.

where and how SARS-CoV-2 is transmitted. Methods: Case reports were extracted from the local Municipal Health Commissions of 320 prefectural cities (municipalities) in China, not including Hubei province, between 4 January and 11 February 2020. We identified all outbreaks involving three or more cases and reviewed the major characteristics of the enclosed spaces in which the outbreaks were reported and associated indoor environmental issues. Results: Three hundred and eighteen outbreaks with three or more cases were identified, involving 1245 confirmed cases in 120 prefectural cities. We divided the venues in which the outbreaks occurred into six categories: homes, transport, food, entertainment, shopping, and miscellaneous. Among the identified outbreaks, 53.8% involved three cases,

Btw: missed this yesterday, but @GovofCO is ending the Colorado lockdown on May 1 - retail, offices, then bars and restaurants by mid-May. Believe he is the first Democratic governor to take this step. Wonder why no one is screaming about the imminent Rocky Mountain apocalypse.

Some Colorado businesses can reopen May 1 as Polis shifts from stay-at-home to 'safer at home'

Retail businesses will be allowed to reopen May 1, though restaurants and schools will remain closed

Scientist wouldn't go into the ocean for $1 MILLION because of COVID.

Maybe she's a billionaire or something?

> Kim Prather – an atmospheric chemist at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography -- strongly believes that COVID-19 could enter the Pacific and transfer back into the air along the California coast ... possibly infecting anyone still daring to surf, swim or simply take a walk on the beach.
> Prather, who lives in San Diego, tells the L.A. Times ... "I wouldn't go in the water if you paid me $1 million right now."
> According to her research ... Prather's found the ocean contains all kinds of pathogens and constantly sprays these particles into the air, but the scary part is -- she believes the coronavirus is light enough to float through the air much farther than we think.
> Translation - social distancing doesn't work with the ocean. Kim drives the point home by saying ... "It's not going to kill you if you miss a few surfing sessions, but it could if you go out there and get in the wrong air."
> Prather's warning comes as the world's scientists are struggling to determine if COVID-19 can spread by more than just sneezes and coughs.
> Even Dr. Fauci's publicly hinting the virus might be more airborne than originally believed and suggesting it's a good idea for everyone to cover their faces.

The politics on this are not as divided as it may seem. I personally know MAGA supporters who are very worried about the virus and Democrats who are increasingly skeptical. Keep making good faith arguments with evidence. That is the key.

Are there Democrats who will stand up to teachers unions? Are their companies that will speak out against more lockdowns? Are there civil libertarians who see the dangers of mandatory vaccines? What about the courts?

I think it's over. The reason Trump won last time is he had a unifying populist message. He hasn't been able to articulate that this time. Getting bogged down in all the stuff that doesn't matter. The onslaught of propaganda and lies the next month will probably be insurmountable

So @nytimes says @realDonaldTrump has "cold-like symptoms" - which means sneezing and a runny nose, maybe?

Based on his testing schedule, they caught his exposure very, very early, so we are all going to get to watch a #SARSCoV2 infection develop or not over the next week.

Whatever you think of Trump, he's physically robust despite mild obesity, and he's never had any signs of lung trouble. The odds are his disease will be mild, perhaps very mild - though the odds don't always pan out.

He's always been a gambler and a rule-breaker, and this is very much in keeping with that. At the least no one can accuse him of hypocrisy; he's downplayed the risks and now he has it. Does that help him with voters? Maybe not, maybe nothing will. But does it hurt him?

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

The refusal to let go of "social distancing" rules despite abundant evidence it's useless in stopping transmission makes it clear this is being used to set a precedent that people shall no longer be permitted to gather in large numbers.

Someone out there doesn't like crowds.

Q&A about school restrictions due to COVID-19

Polski | Icelandic

Answers to common questions about how schools are operating under restrictions due to the COVID-19 epidemic. Updated May 5th, 2020.

See also:

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

Amazon Defends Sale Of Pedophile How-To Guide

Love and Pleasure. The book itself is a disgrace – a how-to guide for pedophiles. It includes, among other things, tips on how to get away with it and how to avoid sexually transmitted diseases by purchasing condom like products for children too small to use actual condoms.

Regardless, Amazon will not remove the book from its store, and has told us "Amazon believes it is censorship not to sell certain books simply because we or others believe their message is objectionable. Amazon does

Today Amazon refused to publish my booklet about the coronavirus because it "did not comply" with their (undisclosed) guidelines. This is outrageous censorship from a company that has gained hugely from lockdowns - and dominates the US book market, especially with stores closed!

Hello,

We're contacting you regarding the following book(s):

Unreported Truths about COVID-19 and Lockdowns: Part 1: Introduction and Death Counts and Estimates by Alex Berenson (AUTHOR) (ID: PRI-GRW1ZENP2S2)

Your book does not comply with our guidelines. As a result we are not offering your book for sale.

Kawasaki Disease

About Kawasaki Disease

Kawasaki disease (KD), also known as Kawasaki syndrome, is an acute febrile illness of unknown etiology that primarily affects children younger than 5 years of age. The disease was first described in Japan by Tomisaku Kawasaki in 1967, and the first cases outside of Japan were reported in Hawaii in 1976.

Clinical signs include fever, rash, swelling of the hands and feet, irritation and redness of the whites of the eyes, swollen lymph glands in the

Some US states with high comorbidities and obesity (and very aggressive coding) may have median death rates in the 79s, but the overall data could not be clearer. Appreciate the chance to explain, though.

I don't agree with all of @zeynep's piece but it is exactly what supposedly serious outlets like @TheAtlantic SHOULD be offering - a non-hysterical take that tracing "super-spreader events" is crucial to controlling #Covid, with ideas about ways to do so.

The hospitalization changes everything. Odds remain high the President will recover. But everything about this looks horrendous. The media will be relentless.

And it's October, not May, so even if he's discharged fast, I don't know if he can prove he's okay in time to matter.

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

The @imperialcollege paper that @nature published today - the one claiming lockdowns saved 3 million lives in Europe - is a joke too. Three big clues (not including the fact it's from Imperial College and has Professor Pecker as a coauthor, which is dispositive by itself):

The key metric may be the one they haven't disclosed: the PCR cycle threshold, which is effectively a measure of viral load. Presumably they are testing him very regularly. If it's rising he's clearing the virus. If it's over 35 he's at almost no risk (from the virus, anyway).

Exactly what it was yesterday. And for six months. #SARSCoV2 is not seriously risky to the vast majority of people. In fact if @who's numbers are correct the death rate is much lower than has been reported.

Trump's illness is scary for him and his family. I hope he recovers...

But an even deeper tragedy will be if the media uses his illness to frighten people unnecessarily and push us toward policies that take away our rights, hurt our economy, and most importantly damage our kids.

And unfortunately that's already happening.

Btw if the President is discharged fast get ready for CNNs like @jaketapper to go on and on about the exceptional care he's received. In fact he would have gotten remdesivir anywhere and donated antibodies are also widely available (Regeneron's drug is a fancy version of those).

In March I said it was likely the bug had been running around in WA for months (no mitigation) and we didn't realize it because it was generally killing people who would be dying during flu season anyway.

Look at the certificates of most corona deaths and tell me I was wrong.

The Milwaukee coroner says about 20 percent of #COVID deaths in his county are misclassified and not due to the virus (not sure if this includes death certificate matching, which typically happens at the state level). 20 percent is likely the minimum.

The dexamethasone is slightly odd but the big takeaway is that they plan to discharge him tomorrow. These physicians do NOT want to be in the position of having to readmit the President. Hard to believe they'd discharge him if they thought there was any chance of that.

Suppose we test 100,000 people in a week. The real incidence of #SARSCoV2 that week is 0.5% - 500 cases. With a 1% false positive rate, we report 1500 cases, 3 times the real number. ALL of those positives, real or false, will be matched against death certificates.

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

Wow. @nature published a paper claiming that lockdowns cut the spread of #COVID-19 by hundreds of millions of cases. The @Washingtonpost (inevitably) lapped it up. A look at the paper reveals it is more full of holes than the mask I have (not) worn all week. Let's discuss...

The @imperialcollege paper that @nature published today - the one claiming lockdowns saved 3 million lives in Europe - is a joke too. Three big clues (not including the fact it's from Imperial College and has Professor Pecker as a coauthor, which is dispositive by itself):

And from a hospital executive, who makes a great point that overcoding of deaths may actually mess up research and treatment efforts:

1. Definitely erring on the side of coding everything COVID that presents with those symptoms. The cynic would say it's because of the increased payment, but frankly even with the 20% kicker it isn't that profitable to treat COVID (absent the fact that every dollar helps as we are well below fixed cost coverage now due to decrease volume/surgeries). The other side of that argument is that it is a patient/provider safety issue to err on that side and treat using extra caution until it's ruled out.

2. On the coding side, this likely gets changed as the diagnosis changes. Medicare and others have a rather effective audit process, so hospitals typically practice caution here and make sure to change to the correct diagnosis. On the death side, I don't know of any similar processes (in other words, there isn't necessarily a payment audit process for cause of death), so why would anyone go back and make sure they had it right, particularly if they weren't in a hospital setting.

Primary

3. This is going to result in problems doing real studies on the disease. We need accurate death counts and accurate co-morbidity and pre-existing condition studies to understand the disease. It's becoming more and more clear that the death rate is much lower than most thought (even though this was obvious from the beginning when we knew we weren't testing in a widespread manner). COVID seems to be either incredibly deadly (for a small percentage) or mild or even asymptomatic for most. Why is that? Is there something we can find to help us understand that even more? Those questions are harder to answer if you have a bunch of false data included in the set. Long term ramifications of the improper coding.

So typical of our political system . .thinking short term and ignoring the downstream effects.

And - for a different perspective - a physician who argues COVID deaths are being coded similarly to flu deaths and overcoding is rare:

Hi Alex,

I am a physician (you can Google my name to verify) who has been following your thoughts on Twitter. I think you do bring up valuable points about the merits of a lockdown i.e. tradeoffs between a recession and disease spread.

The facts that I find quite disheartening are how you are perpetuating the thought that physicians and hospitals are coding deaths as Covid deaths for either political and financial gain. There is a significant amount of people who are starting to believe that Covid deaths are being falsified. This cannot be further from the truth and it is sad that evidence). To take the leap that physicians will lazily or conveniently scribble Covid-19 as the cause of death is just nonsense. If anything, there is a myriad of untested or undiagnosed Covid deaths that are being written as "cardiopulmonary arrest."

There is now a significant amount of folks who genuinely believe that hospitals are coding traffic accident, homicide, etc deaths as Covid deaths (just read your replies on Twitter). There's also the myth that people are dying with Covid and not of Covid. A terminally ill cancer patient who dies of the flu is a flu death and that is how it has been coded for years. It's no different with Covid.

7/ Unless, that is, people are tested (because someone around them actually becomes ill, or their employer or school insists on testing).

If most people are asymptomatic, you can't have an epidemic without testing. That's why super-tester events are so important to the pandemia.

A powerful statement from top scientists:

"Protect[ing] the vulnerable should be the central aim of public health responses to COVID-19...

Those who are not vulnerable should immediately be allowed to resume life as normal."

If most people are asymptomatic, you can't have an epidemic without testing. That's why super-tester events are so important to the pandemia.

It is true that people are TRYING to live their lives normally, but much of the country remains under rules that grow more bizarre and random by the day. (Note that I haven't even mentioned the mask mandates, which, intrusive as they are, don't prevent people from going out.)

These figures are... how do I put this politely? Wrong. @aaronblake seems to be comparing IFR for the flu to CFR for the ro, or something.

The fact is that more people under 18 have died of the flu than #Sarscov2 this year, despite our hyper-aggressive count of #COVID deaths.

Here's the actual estimates of [redacted] IFR (infection fatality rate, the death rate for all infections) from [redacted]. I know, it's hard to find, it's on the CDC Website.

0-19 years: 0.00003 (0.003%)
20-49 years: 0.0002 (0.02%)
50-69 years: 0.005 (0.5%)
70+ years: 0.054 (5.4%).

Umm so they aren't saying the quiet part out loud and they never will but what this letter really implies is that (non N95) masks are useless to stop #sarscov2 because transmission is occurring at particle sizes that masks don't stop on the way in OR out.

Eric Topol ✓ @EricTopol
A rather important letter @ScienceMagazine just published that stresses #SARSCoV2 aerosol transmission (size < 100 µm) and what should be done about it.

1/ One point people miss about #Covid:

There are super-spreader events.
There are also super-TESTER events.

What do I mean?

Many people infected with #Sars-Cov-2 never have any symptoms at all. The commonly used figure is 40-50%, but the real percentage may be much higher...

2/ Why would I say that? The 40-50% figure is based on the general population with positive PCR tests. But antibody tests show those positive PCR tests hugely understate the number of people who have been infected and recovered. Those people presumably had no or mild symptoms...

As you can see, the under 50 estimates are almost exactly the same for the flu and the ro (again, we know this includes many WITH rather than FROM ro deaths because of our counting rules). Thus the flu is likely less dangerous.

The reverse is true over 50, and certainly over 60.

I wanted to believe this was a joke or a hoax - @raleighpolice calling a protest a "non-essential activity" and arresting someone for speaking out against the state's lockdown. But it is as real as Stalin.

The #ReopenNC protest that occurred in Downtown Raleigh today has been cleared. We explained to the protestors that at this time, they are not allowed to protest. It is a non-essential activity and violates the Governor's Executive Order.

There was one arrest made by the State Capitol Police.

POLITICS & GOVERNMENT

Protesters rally for NC to reopen. At least one is arrested for failing to disperse.

2017 = 7,708/day

The only thing IHME has been close with is total overall deaths. They prophecies 602 by today. Actual 599. But I agree the way they are presenting them now completely skews how deaths per day is measured.

2/ Here's a peer-reviewed paper in Italian flu mortality from 2014-2017 - the numbers are pretty brutal.
sciencedirect.com/science/artic! …

During the study period, 136,686 ILI-attributable excess deaths were estimated using the full model (IA + ET effect). The average annual mortality excess rate (MR) ranged from 40.6 to 70.2 per 100,000. The total number of excess ILI-attributable deaths during the 2014/15 season was 41,066, 65.6% higher compared to the previous season. During the 2016/17 season, the number of ILI-attributable excess deaths was 43,336, 57.9% more than the previous season.

Using the Goldstein index, the total number of excess deaths attributable to influenza in the 4-season study period was 68,068. The average annual mortality excess rate (MR) ranged from 11.6 to 41.2 per 100,000. Most of the influenza-associated deaths per year were among elderly individuals (≥65 years) (Table 3). During the

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

Dr. Lipsitch - Thanks for getting back to me. Many of your colleagues will not. Since you have, I'd like to follow up with a (serious, non-trolling) question: why do you think so many top epidemiologists (you, Dr. Osterholm, etc) have so readily endorsed lockdowns since March?

> Marc Lipsitch @mlipsitch

> I keep saying and still believe that. What is clear is that no one has figured out a way, especially in a country with as inadequate a health system as ours for many of those most at risk, to keep deaths low while letting the virus spread.

I think it's fair to say national lockdowns were not received wisdom before then. Even measures such as short-term school closings and postponing large gatherings generated serious debate. Now advocating a return to normal is considered extremist (as you noted). What has changed?

I could throw out some possibilities (I will not politicize the question by mentioning Trump) but I'd rather leave it open-ended.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 3,330 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,300 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of anti-bodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

What's changed since Feb. 14, @mlipsitch (aside from the fact that we now know the virus is far less dangerous than we feared then)?

Replying to @mlipsitch @MauSantillana and @CDCDirector at which point will have to shift to mitigation rather than containment, and we must make sure that restrictions on travel, quarantine, and the like do not outlast their usefulness -- they are costly to individuals, families and economies and shd only be used as long as justified

This is @petersgoodman. He is scared of the ro.

He is mad people in London aren't scared.

He wrote a story about it.

It's an unintentionally funny story, especially when the grocery guy tells him (politely) to get bent.

Raise a glass for Peter, London!

and the ro (again, we know this includes many WITH rather than FROM ro deaths because of our counting rules). Thus the flu is likely less dangerous.

The reverse is true over 50, and certainly over 60.

CORRECTION: Meant to say "The flu is likely MORE dangerous [in people under 50]" (because COVID deaths are overcounted).

Sorry.

Any idea, Alex, what percentage of the 70+ deaths occurred in nursing homes? In other words, what's the fatality rate for non-institutionalized seniors?

Derrick VanGennep @VanGennepD · 9 Std.
There was a French study that looked at this. I think they got IFR ~0.5% by excluding LTC deaths.

Turns out this is one of them thar unintentionally revealing quotes

"All you really need to know about Tony Fauci," says Jack Rowe, a former president and CEO of Mount Sinai NYU Health, "is that, at five-foot, seven-inches, he was the captain of his high school basketball team."

Remember this March, when Dr. Fauci spent all his time cloistered in his office, learning every intricacy of this novel viral threat? Then quietly gave actual elected policymakers the advice they needed to map a response?

A true silent hero, that one.
